Goldsboro City Manager Appointed to State Board:

Governor Pat McCrory recently announced the appointment of City of Goldsboro manager Scott Stevens to the North Carolina Water Treatment Facility Operators Certification Board. Stevens will serve a three-year term on the board, filling the role of municipal manager using a surface water supply. The Water Treatment Facility Operators Certification Board protects public health, conserves and protects the water resources of the state, and protects the public investment in water treatment facilities, among other duties. Stevens previously served as the city manager in Kinston and told the Kinston Free Press, "From my understanding, the board is really trying to administer (the facility operator's certification) and make sure that the rules we're creating are reasonable. Because there's always a cost to that certification, so you want to balance having to require people to get training and certification, with the cost and also with the public safety side of having clean water and clean wastewater."
